FOREWORD

When spring has faded and summer appears
And our youth has passed with the passing years
Our school and its life of work and ease
Will rise out of pages such as these:

"There's sp t-curl Mabel and tow-headed Don!
And what did the photographer do to John?
Gee, wasn't Math awful and "Cicero" mean?
But school was fun and our teachers were keen."

This book is a link in our chain of fate,
Uniting the early days with the late.
Gone are the school-books battered with age,
But memories greet us from every page.

Nell Battle Booker

To

MRS. NELLIE GRAVES HEINITSH, .

who has gone through our four years of high school with us, and who has encouraged, corrected, and inspired us, we dedicate this little volume of HILLIFE in appreciation of all her kindness to, patience with and interest in us.

CLASS HISTORY

Early in September 1930, there assembled in the two home rooms, presided over by Miss Penny and Mrs. Lawson, a group of eighty-one rather non-descript individuals classed as freshmen. Who would guess even after close examination of those eighty-one faces, that back of those blank expressions lay hidden talents? Not long after the opening of school, this same group assembled to organize. Mary Henry was elected president.

All went smoothly that first year until nearly the end of school. On this particular occasion, without any previous warnings whatsoever, clamorous sounds, seemingly escaping from Room 10, shook the old gloomy second-floor corridor relentlessly. Passers-by, wide-eyed and curious, anxiously awaited the bell for the change of classes when they might find out the cause of the sudden outburst. The minutes passed slowly by. At last, the bell rang, the door opened, and there was revealed to the curious eyes of the outsider a group of students vaguely resembling those freshmen who only an hour before had with humble and unimportant footsteps entered that same room. At last the story was told--how in all seriousness Mrs. Heinitch had told these students that they were the best class in Algebra I she had had in all her experience in teaching. And that, my friends, is the legend of "The 1930 Freshman Transfigured".

The next year at the opening of school eighty-one Sophomores assembled, the same number as had enrolled as freshmen the preceding year. In the homerooms of Miss Penny and Mrs. Heinitch they were all seated, each one trembling a little with the joy of being freshmen no longer. The class was organized and settled down to work. Classes were running smoothly. Sophomores could be recognized by their "rapt" expressions as they repeated to one another "all the world's a stage" with flourishes and dramatic gestures. At other times, outside the closed door of Room 10 mysterious mumblings in monotone could be faintly heard. "The locus of all points equidistant from the extremities of a segment--". That was the Geometry class with Mrs. Heinitch at the front of the room vigorously touching her magic wand to various points on a figure and repeating wierd incantations.

Juniors at last! One of our first thoughts as Juniors was Junior rings. These were the object of great interest and enthusiasm for nearly four months. Under the leadership of Billy Hudson, the class president, the Juniors conducted several meetings to select and order their rings.

Around Christmas the Juniors succeeded in selling the most Tubercular seals and were rewarded by free tickets to the Carolina Theater.

Several members of the Junior class, that year, distinguished themselves by capturing some of Miss Penny's golden "A's". It is worth mentioning too that most of them succeeded in passing Math. III.

Finally, at the end of the year we presented to the Seniors the customary Junior-Senior Banquet. All sorts of songs, skits, and take-offs were presented. Oh yes, and the High School faculty was there too, and added their part to the entertainment.

The next September, out of the eighty-one freshmen who four years ago entered high school, fifty-five returned as seniors to work again toward their temporary goal.

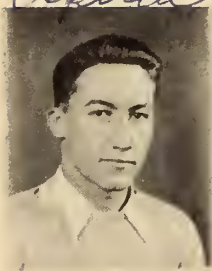

The war waged for senior privileges has finally subsided and commencement time draws near. Under Miss Sallie Page's leadership, the senior class expects to put out an annual--the first in several years--and in the face of depression.

With mingled feelings of joy and regret we now await the time when we shall step up and receive our diplomas--the symbol of four years of high school life.

SENIOR POEM

As we stand on the heights, we turn for a look
 And see our life like a picture book.
 In 1930 our youth and our size
 Made it hard for others to realize
 That they were the ones who really were dumb
 For thinking the Freshmen were stupid and bum.
 As Sophomores, we were much too sassy
 And believed ourselves to be quite "classy".
 And then we thought we were very big
 But learned, for what we got, we had to dig.
 Juniors next, we were near to the top;
 We pushed and struggled and did not stop.
 We worked and studied night after night;
 We were not so dumb, but not so bright.
 Seniors now, the goal reached at last;
 We turn about to view our past.
 There have been many smiles and many a tear
 But we had our frolics and fun while here.
 To our successors we leave our ambition
 And the old school house in good condition.
 Keep striving, dear friends, and set your aim high;
 For you'll surely succeed if you always try.
Louise Spear, Poetess

CLASS PROPHECY

As I, prophetess, look searchingly into my crystal globe, the years drop by until 1948 looms in the transparent orb. After unwearied patience and divine inspiration, I glean how my classmates fare in their paths of light--thirteen years since our separation.

Raymond Andrews has married the farmer's daughter. He makes hay while the sun shines and wild oats while the moonshines.

Viola Andrews and Benson Partin have written a book entitled What Every Child Should Know. Her man and Kenneth Lloyd furnish a pair of rabbits with the sale of each volume.

Waldine Bass, Audrey Williams, and Josephine Pendergraft are chorus girls doing the "uptown lowdown" in Messrs. McCauley's and Neville's speakeasy on 45th Street.

Nell Booker, exhausted by her efforts to see into the future, has relapsed into a cronic coma.

Madeline Brown and Ethel McGalliard are heads of the "Old Ladies Order for Suppression of Cruelty to Animals".

Mary Frances Burch is house mother of the Phi-Phi's.

Coila Carden is a member of a "spit and argue" club.

Loma Copeland, lost in thought over the Einstein theory, has drowned in the bathtub.

Bruce Durham, Elmer Oakley and Ernest Riggsbee have joined a nudist colony.

Julian Head is a gigilo in Gay Paree.

Horace Hodges is a professional winker of Peggy Hopkins Joyce.

James Horne, No. 103, scribbles notes to Edna Farrell on the walls of his cell.

Ruth Howard is a night club hostess.

Lillian Jackson is aiding in philanthropic work in the slums of Chapel Hill.

Peggy Johnston is a "soap box" orator, stumping for Billy Hudson, who is running for society editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly.

Anne Turner Knight, retiring from literary game in the Ballyhoo, has dedicated her life to missionary work in China.

Mary McKee is still trying to collect Proconian dues.

Ester Mebane, beautiful graduate, has become "Miss Sparrow's Pool".

Margaret Munch has sold her celebrated portrait, Lona Misa, to the P. P. Picture Puzzle Corporation for $5.00. Ten years later Louise Spear is still unable to piece it together.

Genera Neville and Shelton Sparrow have married and are raising nuts in Brazil. No cracks!

Hoyt Perry, after a wan attempt to keep the wolf from the door, has left to spend a quiet (?) life with his mother-in-law.

Sallie Page has married a dark and handsome hombre and is living on a ranch in Texas raising kids--little goats, you thing!

Sitting Bull--alias Hugh Pahlow--has died of sleeping sickness on an Indian reservation in the Yosemite Valley.

Blodgett Peebles is trying to sell Robert Strowd his special Austin Asperins for Austins with growing pains.

Florence Pullen--owner of a beauty shoppe--is trying to curl Julia Peebles hair.

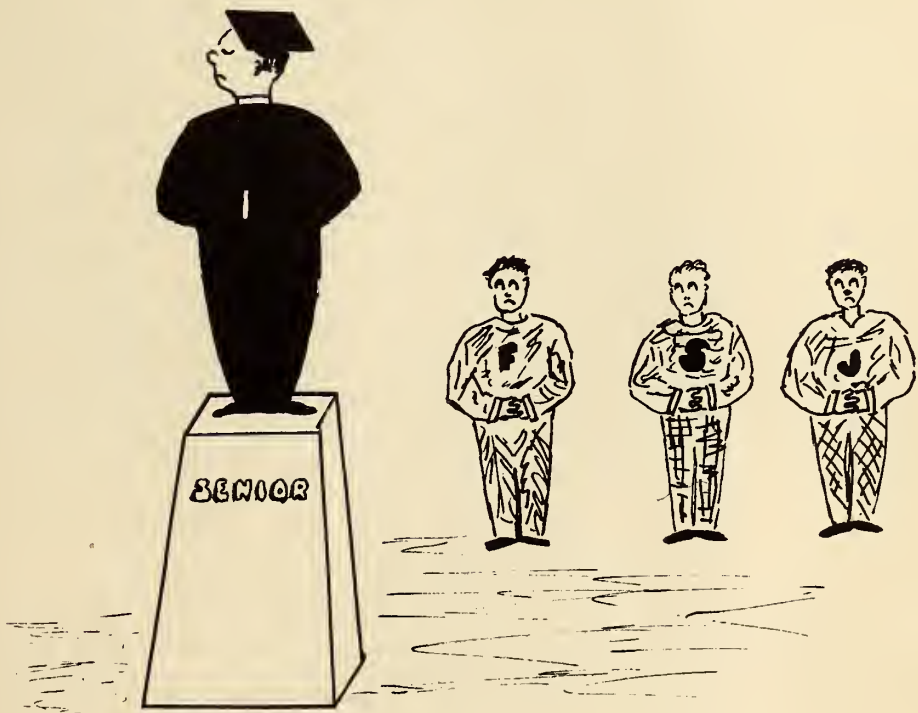

Goes West: Sue Southerland, abandoning a glamorous stage-role as Lady Macbeth, has become a double for Mae West.

Lewis Sparrow gave up the harmonica to play the steam calliope in Ringling's Circus.

Ralph Sprinkle has given up trying to sell mistletoe to Margaret Jordan.

Bessie Headen Strowd has beaten Peggy Hopkins Joyce's record.

John Umstead, following in the footsteps of his relatives, has entered the Senate building as a janitor. Nell Booker, Prophetess
